Uranium Mill Reopens in S. Utah

Energy Fuels Nuclear Inc. of Denver has resumed uranium processing at its White Mesa mill, six miles south of Blanding. The operation had been suspended since 1990.

During a five-month mining run, Energy Fuels expects to recover more than 2 million pounds of uranium oxide, worth $23.5 million. The company estimates San Juan County will see about $15 million in economic benefits once mining starts.

Energy Fuels will deliver the yellowcake product to customers in the United States, Japan and Europe.

PacifiCorp Will Lay Off 120 at Utah Power Plants

By Steven Oberbeck
THE SALT LAKE TRIBUNE

PacifiCorp permanently will lay off 120 employees from its four Utah power plants in a move the company says is necessary to keep its operations competitive.

The Portland-based parent company of Utah Power announced the pending layoffs at each plant Monday morning.

"It will be a few weeks before we determine exactly who will be involved," says Utah Power spokesman Dave Eskelsen. "Our union contracts at the plants call for it to be based upon seniority."

PacifiCorp says it will eliminate eight positions at its Carbon Plant in Helper; 41 jobs at its Hunter Plant in Castle Dale; 33 at its Huntington Plant; and 38 at the Gadsby Plant in Salt Lake City.

About 104 of the workers whose jobs will be eliminated are members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 57, which represents many of the nearly 700 employees at the four facilities.

"We knew something was going to happen. We have been hearing rumors for weeks that this was in the works," says Blaine Newman, business manager for Local 57.

Newman says he can understand the company's need to remain competitive. But he says workers at the plants have been reporting heavy workloads and large numbers of overtime hours.

"And we're always concerned when layoffs occur that safety might be affected," Newman says.

PacifiCorp generates more than $500 million a year wholesaling electricity to large corporate users and other utilities. But Eskelsen says competition has been heating up among suppliers, which include natural-gas producers that can offer that fuel as
